If you knew you were going to die suddenly in 365 days,

I am at an age where limited time is a consideration. I would spend more time alone and I would probably move to the Alps and live in my van. I would continue to spend more time on music and poetry. I think I would give up the day job. Privileged though I am to have it, it the source of most of the distracting noise in my life.

I would stop doing all those things I do today to be able to live well tomorrow.

But - why not start now with it?

is there anything about your current life that you would change?

No. I often think about this because I think about death a lot. I do my best to live each day as if I would die tomorrow. Of course I often fall off the log, by watching crap TV or overdoing work and not spending enough time at home with the family etc., but basically, my life is as I chose it and I like it.

Maybe I'd think a bit less and enjoy a bit more.

I would drop out of school.

● GIVE

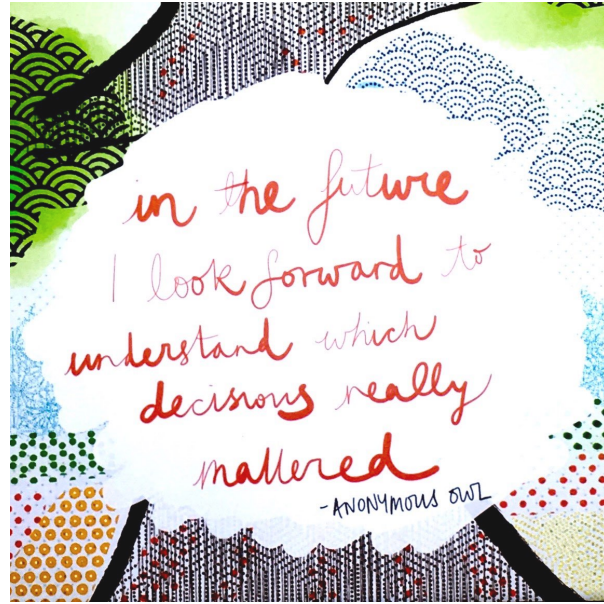

● RECEIVE

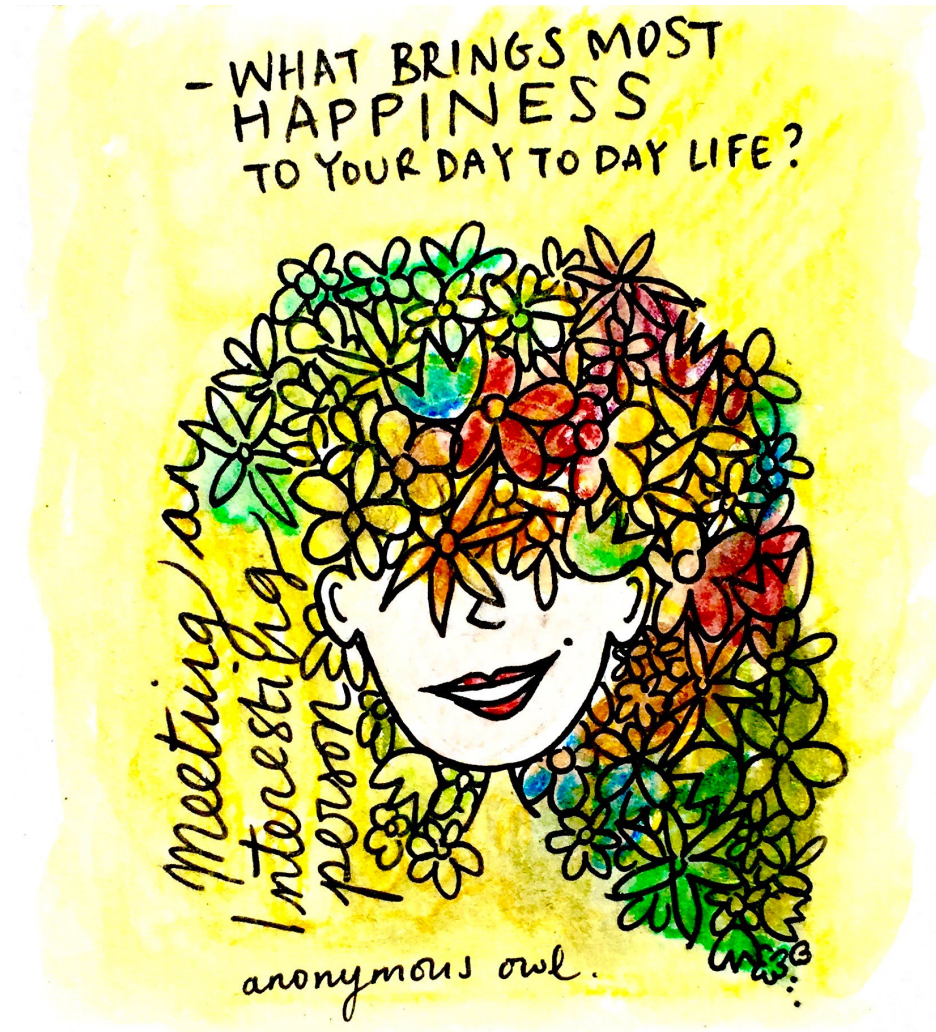

CAN YOU THINK OF A
WAY OF IMPROVING
THIS SURVEY?

Having an additional question after the one that asks about either give or received, asking why.

I will answer why I chose "Give" rather than "Receive". The smaller-self always wants to receive, as it measures itself on how much it has. The higher-self wants to give, because it doesn't feel any attachments to anything and really means to enjoys the welfare of others. And that's my long-term goal.
